

National Transport & Toy Museum

Brief History

Gerald Rhodes

The National Transport & Toy Museum is the Southern Hemisphere's largest private collection open to the public. It was one man's dream, a dream that had taken over 50 years to collect. The collector, Mr Gerald Rhodes of Christchurch started his career with International Harvester as an apprentice mechanic, then went on to become a successful salesman for them. After going out on his own he then established his own car and truck wrecking businesses.

With the love of wheeling and dealing these businesses allowed him to be in the right places to pick up "bargains". Mr Rhodes lived in Christchurch, but Wanaka was chosen because of the dry Central Otago climate (no sea breeze and low humidity) helps preserve the machinery. From choosing the site in 1988, many obstacles had to be crossed, but with great tenacity, the Museum started to take shape.

After receiving resource consent in 1993, a second hand building from the Clyde Dam project, was purchased. The erection of the first building did not start until October 1994. In 1995 the Second Building “The Hangar” was built using the Zipperlock Steel Building System design as a cylindrical light gauge galvanised formed sheet building, free of internal framing. Then using old hangar doors from Christchurch made it look like the original hangars used in the 1940s.

The Museum opened to the public on 26th December 1995 making the dream a reality.

In 1996 the museum had opened with over 120 vehicles, 7 Aircraft, and around 2,000 toys on display. With a passion for collecting things, the museum quickly expanded. Fast running out of indoor space the Main building was extended in 2001/2002.

The museum has a variety of exhibits that has something for the whole family. There are now over 600 vehicles, 18 aircraft, over 60,000 Toys and 1,000's of miscellaneous items on display.

In April 2004 a 1440 m² building, “The Fire Station” was built. December 2005 saw a 2000 m² building “Hangar 2”. 2009 excavations began for extension to Hangar 2.

How did he collect it?

Auctions, flea markets, garage sales, newspapers, magazines and word of mouth. Since the Museum has opened another avenue has arisen, people coming through and finding the National Transport & Toy Museum is the place they would like their collection or vehicle to be, so are willing to donate it to the Museum.

Nearly all the toys have been purchased in New Zealand, mainly from the Christchurch/ Canterbury Region. About 3% of the vehicles are from overseas, 10% from the North Island and the rest from the South Island of New Zealand. The collection has been financed by Gerald and gate receipts.

Gerald Rhodes died on the 13th of August 2015, after a long fight with Parkinson's. His son and daughter, Jason and Debbie are still managing the museum. Jason started before the first museum building began and Debbie arrived just before the museum opened to the public.

Museum Shop

The shop is open the same hours as the museum, and sells a wide range of models, toys, gifts and souvenirs.

Hiring out

The Museum and grounds can be hired for conventions or functions. Most exhibits are in working order so are ideal for either filming or advertising.
